Indian Country continues push to strengthen Violence Against Women Act

Indianz.com - December 8, 2021

Indian Country is making another push to restore tribal jurisdiction over non-Indians who commit violence in their communities, only this time with a more supportive president in the White House. Tribes and their advocates have been trying to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act in order to hold all offenders — regardless of race — responsible for a wider range of crimes. But the prior Republican administration famously refused to support the effort despite facing pressure to do so.

Report: Indigenous women kidnapped, murdered at disproportionately high rate in Minnesota

ABC Newspapers - December 09, 2021

Prior to Sen. Mary Kunesh's efforts to form a state task force on missing and murdered Indigenous women and relatives, there were hardly any statistics available on Native American victims of these crimes. In Minnesota, native women and girls count for about 1% of the population, but 8% of women and girls who were murdered from 2010 to 2018 were American Indian, said Kunesh, a Democratic state senator from New Brighton, whose district includes of southern Anoka County.

Years before UC Hastings pondered rechristening, California Supreme Court ditched founder's name

San Francisco Chronicle - December 10, 2021

After Tani Cantil-Sakauye became the 28th chief justice of the California Supreme Court, she learned that a computer research engine the court used for online judicial education was named "Serranus," after its first chief justice.

Why a disproportionate number of Native American, Black children remain in Oregon foster care despite leaders' efforts at change

(Requires subscription)

Oregonian - December 12, 2021

Over the last 18 months, leaders of Oregon's child welfare program have said they are working hard to pull fewer Native American and Black children from their families and into the child welfare system. Yet the percentage of those children in foster care has remained steadily high over the past three years, the agency's own data shows.

These programs are supported with funds from the Office on Violence Against Women, U.S. Department of Justice that are administered through the Governor's Office of Emergency Services (CalOES), the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Court Improvement Program, and the California Department of Social Services.

Federal funds boost Native American health services in San Francisco

San Francisco Examiner - December 13, 2021

One of San Francisco's premier addiction recovery programs is set to get a major boost thanks to a recently passed amendment to the U.S. Infrastructure Bill, which will allow urban Native American organizations to use the funding on health-related projects. Leaders at Friendship House, an inpatient drug and health treatment center that works with Native Americans in San Francisco and tribes throughout California, say the funding will go toward a new six-story building in the Mission District that will serve as a one-stop-shop for Native health, housing, culture and spiritual practice. "The irony and the tragedy is that America's first peoples have no physical place to call home. The village will offer a physical space for Native people to gather for social services and youth programming and cultural space where we can sing and dance and celebrate."

State Supreme Court weighs counties' obligations to American Indian children (May require subscription)

Colorado Springs Gazette - December 14, 2021

A mother of two children struggled with substance abuse and was the victim of domestic violence. When the children's father assaulted her and moved out, she abandoned the children at daycare. The matter culminated in a Denver judge terminating both parents' rights in 2020. However, the child welfare case has now landed at the Colorado Supreme Court because of one detail that has major implications: the mother belongs to an American Indian tribe.

Yurok Tribe declares emergency over trafficking incidents, missing Indigenous people (Press release)

Yurok Tribal Council - December 16, 2021

Today, the Yurok Tribal Council issued an emergency declaration in response to a spate of missing persons and attempted human trafficking incidents on the reservation and in Arcata, where there is a disproportionate number of cases involving missing and murdered indigenous women (MMIW). "Today, we are asking our local, state and federal partners to take a stronger stand against the trafficking of Native women and girls," said Joseph L. James, the Chairman of the Yurok Tribe. "While human trafficking and abductions have been all too common in the Humboldt County area, I ask all of our members to be extra cautious at this time. If you have to go into town, please take someone with you and let a family member know when you expect to return."

Tribal Court vs State Court: differences following the McGirt decision

Appeals court to decide if Minnesota DNR can be sued in tribal court

MPR News – December 16, 2021

In August, a lawsuit filed in White Earth Tribal Court attempted to stop the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources from issuing a permit to Enbridge Energy to pump water from trenches dug to lay the pipe for the Line 3 oil pipeline. White Earth said the permit violated a tribal code approved in 2018 that protects wild rice.

New unit will focus on missing and murdered Indigenous women

KOB 4 Albuquerque News - December 16, 2021

Since 2014, more than 660 Native Americans have been reported missing in the U.S. Nearly half of those cases involve women and a majority are being investigated in New Mexico. That is why Bernalillo County and state officials signed a memorandum of understanding Thursday. They also announced a new subunit within the DA's office, dedicated to solving hundreds of MMIW cases and raising awareness for violence against Indigenous communities in the process.

Murder is third leading cause of death for Indigenous women

Abluquerque Journal – December 16, 2021

The subunit will assist the statewide MMIWR Task Force in analysis, case investigations and interventions, and will develop a criminal network software platform where victims, families, law enforcement and investigative agencies can share information as guickly as it becomes available.

How Minnesota's Foster Care System Reminds Native Moms of a Racist Legacy

Mother Jones and Fuller Project - December 21, 2021

Since 2018, Nord has worked at the Indian Child Welfare Act Law Center, an organization dedicated to helping Native mothers and families reunite with their children in the foster care system. She sees the legacy of generations wrapped up in the child welfare system. She can tell you which judges allow smudging, a traditional practice for many tribes that helps alleviate stress and anxiety, before court. And which social workers are particularly "nasty" to Native moms.

Court hears arguments in wild rice 'rights of nature' lawsuit

Minnesota Reformer – December 22, 2021

The White Earth Tribal Court heard arguments in a first-of-its-kind lawsuit against the state of Minnesota Monday, which centers on the tribe's allegations that the state violated the rights of wild rice during construction of Enbridge's Line 3 oil pipeline. The case raises complex legal questions and has garnered international attention as part of the "rights of nature" movement. Here are answers to your questions about the lawsuit.

As COVID fueled the drug crisis, Native Americans hit worst

AP News - December 23, 2021

"What they died of is a broken heart." A pandemic-fueled drug crisis has hit Native American communities particularly hard these past two years. The overdose death rate is higher there than anywhere else in the country.

State statutes could protect families if Indian Child Welfare Act is overturned

Gaylord News - December 28, 2021

A Texas challenge to the federal Indian Child Welfare Act might not be entirely successful in at least nine states where state laws impose similar restrictions on the adoption of Indigenous children by non-Native parents, some experts say. The court has not yet said whether it will take the case, but Chrissi Nimmo, deputy attorney general for the Cherokee Nation, said state statutes can further protect Indigenous children and their families if the court ultimately finds the act unconstitutional.

Top Stories of 2021: The Future of Tribal Child Welfare

Imprint - December 30, 2021

A roundup of some of The Imprint's most impactful stories from the past year. It grew increasingly likely as 2021 progressed that the Supreme Court will hear a case known as Brackeen v. Haaland. At stake: the future of the Indian Child Welfare Act, or ICWA, a law that seeks to protect the rights of tribes and families that was passed at a time when an estimated one-third of Native American children were removed from their homes. Both sides in the case have asked the high court to take on Brackeen, and decide the fate of law. ICWA became more than 40 years ago. The Imprint used a collection of recent casework in Minneapolis to examine the modern-day importance of a law that was passed to prevent the extinction of some tribes as children were ripped from their ranks and placed with white families.

HCR33 Report: Idaho's Missing and Murdered Indigenous Persons. Submitted to the Idaho Legislature,

September 30, 2021. Fillmore, Melanie L. Lane K. Gillespie, Growette Bostaph, Lisa M. King, Laura L. Gilbert, Sheena L. Idaho Legislature. 2021

House Concurrent Resolution No. 33 (HCR33) was introduced in the Health and Welfare Committee, and passed by both houses of the Legislature in March 2020. HCR33 recognizes Missing and Murdered Indigenous Persons (MMIP) as a crisis in Idaho, designates May 5th as a day of awareness for MMIP, and supports efforts to further investigate incidence rates, underlying causes, and possible solutions through collaborative efforts. Public testimony in support of the resolution came from a diverse group of stakeholders, including legislative sponsors, the U.S. Attorney for the District of Idaho, tribal legal and justice practitioners, and Indigenous advocates. The following passages serve as a reminder of the central role of Idaho's tribes, and the opportunities and challenges in addressing MMIP.

2021 Update on the Status of Tribal Consultation Recommendations. United States. Department of Justice. Office on Violence against Women. 2021

On October 27-30, 2020, the Department of Justice (DOJ) hosted its 15th annual government-togovernment consultation on violence against American Indian and Alaska Native (Al/AN) women. This annual consultation is required by law to address the federal administration of tribal funds and programs established under the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (VAWA) and its subsequent reauthorizations.1 DOJ, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), and the Department of the Interior (DOI) received recommendations from tribal leaders on the four statutorily-mandated consultation topics.

Tying a tribal officer's hands: Tribal law enforcement authority under United States v. Cooley. Koski, Mikaela, 126 Penn St. L. Rev. 275 (2021)

Abstract: American Indian reservations make up more than 56 million acres in the United States. The rules governing enforcement of criminal law in Indian Country are complex. While tribal law enforcement officers have authority within a tribe's reservation, they have reduced authority on public roads that run through the reservations, especially when they interact with an individual who lacks Indian status. The Supreme Court recently ruled on the extent of this reduced tribal law enforcement authority in United States v. Cooley.

When a Loved One Goes Missing: Resources for Families of Missing American Indian and Alaska Native Adults and resources that assist family members and friends in the search for and the aftermath of a missing adult loved one.

Active Efforts and the Futility Doctrine

Hon. Leonard Edwards (Ret.)

The Guardian, NACC's quarterly law journal, Volume 43 · Number 04, Winter 2021
Active efforts is a concept created by Congress with the passage of the Indian Child Welfare Act in 1978 (the ICWA).1 It refers to the obligation of social workers to provide services and support for Native American families who come to the attention of child protection authorities because of suspected child neglect or abuse.

Sexual Assault Prevention Program for American Indian Girls - This was a sexual assault prevention program adapted for American Indian girls that sought to reduce sexual assault victimization and to improve sexual assault resistance skills and self-defense knowledge. The program is rated Promising. Girls who received the intervention reported statistically significantly lower rates of sexual assault and sexual harassment, compared with girls in the comparison group. However, there was no impact on reported rates of physical dating violence. | NIJ

Slaves, Indians, and Legal Formalism in 19th Century America

Christopher R. Rossi, UiT, The Arctic Unmiversity of Norway. October 2021

Abstract: The US engagement with 19th century international society saw the maturation of its approach toward international law. This paper focuses on two historical considerations that helped to shape that character--ending the international slave trade, and Indian removal. An emerging legal methodology of legal formalism helped to rationalize this engagement, and affected the young republic's engagement with the world. Understanding the rise of legal formalism, where it came from and what were its influences, uncovers a significantly American story of ambivalence, which has shaped US foreign policy vacillations between themes of universalism and unilateralism, and international community and international society.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

January is National Stalking Awareness, Human Trafficking, and Slavery Prevention Month

The National Indigenous Women's Resource Center (NIWRC) uplifts the tireless work of Native advocates and programs as we work together to shine a light on January as National Stalking Awareness, Human Trafficking, and Slavery Prevention Month. As a national Native-led nonprofit organization dedicated to ending violence against Indigenous women and children, NIWRC strongly supports the efforts to raise awareness of and action to end these crimes, given American Indians, Alaska Natives, and Native Hawaiians experience some of the highest rates of sex trafficking and stalking in the United States.
